I am interested in the practical application of renewable energy in the Kansas context as well as questions of environmental impact and public understanding. Solar energy research can also be a tremendous vehicle for education at all levels. I am working on ways to integrate this into the curriculum at the University of Kansas. To this end I am participating in preparations for the Solar Decathlon which involves assembling a multidisciplinary team to build a solar powered house. This is a lot of fun.